Bachelor of Science (Honours) in Public Health and Health Promotion

The BSc. (Hons) in Public Health and Health Promotion is a full-time four-year honours degree course.

With a focus on community health, disease prevention, and health education, you'll learn practical skills and knowledge to help promote healthy behaviours and positive change in individuals, groups, and populations. By learning how to influence the factors that impact health, you can improve the physical, mental, and emotional well-being of those most in need. Plus, with a variety of career paths and opportunities for growth, including international placement opportunities, a health promotion degree can help you build a fulfilling and rewarding career that aligns with your values and goals.

Complete the first year of the four-year degree at College of Further Education and Training, Kilkenny, followed by three years at South East Technological
